

Sustainability Management | Greening Human Resources

A two-day International Conference on Developing Human Capital for Sustainable Economies will be held from May 27th to 28th, 2010 in Karlsruhe, Germany. This event will bring together academia, sustainable development practitioners, business leaders, environmental management experts, members of government organisations and international development agencies, hr professionals, corporate advisors, business analysts, economists, policy makers and other stakeholders to discuss key emerging issues including:

Climate change and the emergence of the green economy;
Challenges and opportunities in the era of pro-environment regulatory framework and green consumerism;
How is the transformation from high to low carbon and sustainable economy impacting human capital management; and Developing and managing human capital for the green economy.

Further to the knowledge sharing on greening human capital; the upcoming event also provides an excellent networking opportunity with relevant stakeholders in Europe and internationally. An excursion (optional) on Saturday the 29th of May, 2010 is planned which will also provide an additional networking opportunity in an informal environment to get to know academia, corporate and human resource executives, sustainability management experts and other stakeholders.

You are cordially invited to attend this international event and/ or nominate members of your organisation.
