

Research Week — highlights

The second annual Research Week, set for March 27-April 1, is filled with events designed to showcase TRU faculty and student research, and promote ongoing research through a variety of workshops and presentations.

- Register now! 180(s) Research Challenge — Each year grad students take centre stage in Three Minute Thesis competition, but this year, TRU faculty are getting in on the action. The goal is identical: Deliver a compelling research presentation in 180-seconds or less, using only a static slide. Deadline to register is March 22, 2017.
- Distinguished Researcher Series — On March 28, join Drs. Terry Kading, Tina Block and Dawn Farough for a conversation about the forthcoming book, Leadership and Learning in the Small City — New Perspectives on Quality of Life. On March 31, join three of TRU's newest Canada Research Chairs as they present Issues in Community-Based Research: Challenges and Expectations.
- Research Week Keynote with Dr. Jenny Shanahan — The director of undergraduate research at Bridgewater State University outlines the value of High Impact Practices like undergraduate research, and the importance of including these practices in general education requirements.
- Managing your message: Media skills for researchers — This workshop is designed to provide researchers with best practices for engaging with media to ensure their messages are represented fairly and accurately across all mediums. Photographer Andrew Snucins will be on hand to provide those in attendance with professional headshots, ideal for websites, conference presentations, and more.
